In the Wake of the Game By GUS MALBERT

Again, we are compelled to call attention to the many perils besetting the managers because of the thirteen player rule. Here comes Griffin back to were certainly not helping Richmond. er rule. Here comes Griffin back to Richmond with the most important series of the season facing him minus the services of one of his pitchers. Because of the injury to the manager, it was necessary to use Charlie Strain at second base during the Portsmouth series. Using Strain as a substitute infelder means lessening the pitching strength of the team by just one pitcher. Logically it should be Strain's turn to work this afternoon, but no manager would have the heart to ask his credit and just one assist.

Returning to the native heath nearly a half game to the badlet is by no way of furnishing cause for a Sousalike welcome. They hit the trail snugly, and, as we thought, securely intrenched on the top perch, but were lapped of of the outward march by our enemies of to-day, our enemies twice to-morrow and again on the day following.

When it comes to furnishing the real, papricalined thriller, this fourgame series between Colts and Goobers is going to set some kind of new standards. To complete the week in first place, it will be up to the Griffthian of the standards of the week in first place, it will be up to the Griffthian of the standards. To do this Manager Griffin will endeaved to send his strongest battlemen to the front, while Heinrich Busch, our well-loved foeman, has been sharpenting sword and lance for the joust since the barrier was raised in mid-April.
